502801 DHS Continuous Supervisory Leader Development

Course Description

Leader effectiveness is a dynamic, not static, combination of competence, context, and commitment. Leaders must continuously learn new ways of thinking, understand the environment in which they lead, increase sophistication in their art and science, and continuously assess their strengths and developmental needs against the demands of different positions, staffs, bosses, and mission deliverables. Too often, supervisors receive very little or sporadic development as they increase in tenure, responsibility, or experience other changes. Organizations that invest in the continuous
